Children who experience a _____ (1) friendship before the birth of a sibling are likely to have a better _____ (2) with that brother or sister that endures throughout their childhood, said Laurie Kramer in a University of Illinois study published in December's Journal of Family Psychology.

When early friendships are successful, young children get the chance to master sophisticated social and _____ (3) skills, even more than they do with a parent. When parents relate to a child, they do a lot of the work, figuring out what the child needs and then (4) _____ those needs, says Kramer. However, this is not usually the case when two children are interacting.

The research showed that the benefits of early friends are long-lasting. Children who had a positive relationship with a best friend before the birth of a _____ (5) ultimately had a good relationship with their sibling that lasted throughout _____ (6), Kramer said. And children who as preschoolers were able to coordinate play with a friend, manage conflicts, and keep an _____ (7) positive in tone were most likely as teenagers to avoid the negative sibling interaction that can sometimes launch children on a path of anti-social behavior, she added. 'From birth, parents can _____ (8) and help develop these social competencies (or _____, offering toys and playing with them,' she said.
